Summary

HCA Healthcare's shares have outperformed its industry in a year's time. The company's top line has been growing over the last several quarters on the back of same facility as well as equivalent admissions, same facility emergency room growth, etc. Multiple acquisitions have helped it increase its patient volumes, enabled network expansion across several markets and added hospitals to its portfolio. A strong balance sheet and free cash flow are other positives of the company. However, its high operating expenses persistently weigh on the margins. High leverage is another concern. Its weak return on equity also bothers. The coronavirus global pandemic would likely dent the company's revenues due to cancellation in elective surgeries.

Overview

Effective May 8, 2017, the company's name was changed to HCA Healthcare, Inc. from HCA Holdings, Inc. It is the largest non-governmental operator of acute care hospitals in the U.S. Headquartered in Nashville, TN, it operates hospitals and related health care entities.

At the end of 2019, the company operated 184 hospitals comprising 179 general, acute care hospitals, three psychiatric hospitals and one rehabilitation hospital. The company also operated 123 freestanding surgery centers. Its business is spread across 21 states and England.

It operates in two geographically organized groups – the National and American Groups.

The National Group includes 95 hospitals across Alaska, California, Florida, southern Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, northern Kentucky, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, South Carolina, Utah and Virginia.

The American Group includes 83 hospitals across Colorado, northern Georgia, Kansas, southern Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Tennessee and Texas. The company also operates six hospitals in England that are included in the Corporate and Other group.

The company's general, acute care hospitals with 48,443 licensed beds provide a wide range of services to cater to different medical specialties, such as internal medicine, general surgery, cardiology, oncology, neurosurgery, orthopedics and obstetrics as well as diagnostic and emergency services. As of Dec 31, 2019, HCA Healthcare's three psychiatric hospitals with 412 licensed beds offered a full range of mental health care services through inpatient, partial hospitalization and outpatient settings.

Reasons To Buy:

- ▲ Share Price Performance: Shares of HCA Healthcare have outperformed its industry in the past year. The company's strong fundamentals are expected to help the stock continue its rally going forward.
- ▲ 2020 Guidance: Following fourth-quarter results, the company provided its 2020 guidance. It expects its current-year revenues in the band of $53.5-$55.5 billion, the midpoint implying an increase of 6.2% from the 2019 reported figure. Adjusted EBITDA is projected at a revised range of $10.25-10.65 billion, the midpoint indicating an upside of 6% from the prior-year reported figure. The company expects its EPS in the bracket of $11.30-$12.10 per share for 2020, indicating growth from $10.07 reported in 2019. The company expects its same-facility equivalent admissions to grow between 2% and 3% for 2020. An upward revision in guidance instills investor confidence in the stock.
- ▲ Consistent Growth in Top Line: HCA Healthcare has sustained growth for long. Its revenues witnessed a CAGR of 6.7% during the 2015-2019 period, backed by an increase in same facility admissions and equivalent admissions, same facility emergency room growth and surgical growth. We expect the trend to continue, given the company's efforts to enter large, fast-developing urban markets with growing population in constant need of its services.
- ▲ Acquisitions Fueling Inorganic Growth: HCA Healthcare has been emphasizing on acquisitions for expedited growth. Its inorganic growth strategies have led to an increase in patient volumes enabled network expansion across several markets and added hospitals to its portfolio. The company's acquisitions are expected to add scale to its business, positioning it better to weather the regulatory uncertainty in the healthcare sector. During 2018 and 2019, HCA Healthcare paid a total of $1.2 billion and $1.7 billion each for its acquisitions. All these buyouts helped the company boost its portfolio and penetrate further into different geographies.
- ▲ Strong Balance Sheet: HCA Healthcare's balance sheet and cash flows (the company has consistently generated increased free cash flow for the past several years) are impressive and offer the potential for accretive mergers and acquisitions alongside shareholder-friendly capital deployment through buybacks. In January 2020, the company raised its quarterly cash dividend by 7.5%. Its dividend yield of 1.5%, above the industry average of 1.2%, also impresses. Its cash flow provided by operating activities continues to be strong with the metric rising 12.4% in 2019. The company projects its 2020 cash flow from operations to be between $7.6 billion and $8 billion, the midpoint reflects a 2.6% increase from the 2019 reported figure.

The company's numerous acquisitions, rising admissions, diversified business and strong balance sheet should drive long term growth. A solid guidance also contributes.

Reasons To Sell:

- ▼ Rising Expenses: The company witnessed escalating expenses from the past many years due to higher salaries and benefits, supplies plus other operating costs. In 2019, the same rose 10.2% year over year. Going forward too, the company is expected to witness a rise in costs due to its constant growth-related investments. The company expects capital expenditures for 2020 in the range of $4-$4.2 billion while depreciation and amortization are estimated to be $2.8 billion.
- ▼ High Financial Leverage: Long-term debt has been increasing since 2011, creating a financial risk for the company. Moreover, its leverage ratio (total debt to capital) of 102% is higher than the industry average of 97.5%. The company's interest expense has also been rising over the last several quarters. In 2018 and 2019, the metric increased 3.8% and 3.9% each year over year. For 2020, the company expects its interest expense to be $1.8 billion, almost in-line with 2019's reported figure. We expect leverage to remain at elevated levels as the company raises debt-to-finance buyouts.
- ▼ Weak ROE: Further, HCA Healthcare's trailing 12-month return on equity (ROE) of -242% reflects a decline since 2015. This, in turn, undermines its growth potential and also compares unfavorably with its industry average of 678.5%. Additionally, the company's negative ROE mirrors its inefficiency in using shareholders' funds, which is not attractive for investors.
- ▼ COVID-19 Effect on Revenues: The coronavirus outbreak has required hospitals to keep their elective procedures on hold to accommodate any potential surge in COVID-19 infected admissions. Cancellation in elective surgeries to accommodate coronavirus-infected patients will hurt the company's revenues. Moreover, it is feared that coronavirus outbreak may cause recession. Such an economic situation may lead to loss of jobs, which would mean less number of people covered by private insurance and more number of people with insurance from Government health schemes – Medicare and Medicaid. Since profitability of the Government sponsored health insurance plans is lower than that covered under employer sponsored plans, margins of the hospitals are likely to take a hit. Higher number of individuals without sufficient health insurance cover might also lead to hospitals facing the issue of bad debts from unpaid medical bills.

HCA Healthcare suffers from weakness in international operations. Negative return on equity and stretched valuation makes the stock look unattractive.
