Summary

TransDigm has been enjoying significant growth opportunities in the defense space on account of the expansionary budgetary policy adopted by the U.S. administration and other developing nations in past couple of years. Consistent improvement in revenue passenger miles has been boosting the commercial aerospace industry, thereby benefitting TransDigm. Its latest acquisition, Esterline, should improve its position in the aerospace aftermarket. In the past year, its shares have outperformed its industry. However, its business is sensitive to flight hours of customer planes, size and age of the worldwide aircraft fleet and customers' profitability. Its unfavorable leverage ratios and high debt levels may discourage safe-bet investors in choosing this stock going ahead. Its trailing 12-month P/E ratio is higher than that of its industry's.

Overview

Incepted in 1993, TransDigm is a leading global designer, producer and supplier of highly engineered aerospace components that are used in commercial and military aircraft. The company, through its well-diversified business, offers a broad range of products to its customers. TransDigm currently has four reportable segments:

Airframe: This segment produces systems and components like engineered latching and locking devices, security components and systems, aircraft audio systems, specialized lavatory components, seat belts and safety restraints, engineered interior surfaces and related components, military personnel parachutes and cargo delivery systems. These are used in non-power airframe applications utilizing airframe and cabin structure technologies. It contributed 44.6% to the company's total sales in fiscal 2019.

Power & Control: This segment develops products like mechanical/electro-mechanical actuators and controls, ignition systems and engine technology, specialized pumps and valves, power conditioning devices, specialized AC/DC electric motors and generators, and lifting devices and cargo loading and handling systems. These are used in controlling power of the aircraft utilizing electronic, fluid, power and mechanical motion control technologies. It contributed 52.4% to the company's total sales in fiscal 2019.

Non-aviation: This segment's products include seat belts and safety restraints for ground transportation applications, mechanical/electro-mechanical actuators and controls for space applications, and refueling systems for heavy equipment used in mining, construction and other industries. It contributed 3% to the company's total sales in fiscal 2019.

Esterline: Esterline Technologies became a reportable segment of TransDigm, post its acquisition in March 2019. Notably, Esterline includes a collection of approximately 20 reporting units that primarily develop, produce and market products for the aerospace and defense industry. However, the company is yet to include this segment in its core business.

Reasons To Buy:

- ▲ The commercial aerospace industry is witnessing increased revenue passenger miles (RPMs) since 2010, which resulted in steady growth in this industry throughout 2019. Also, growth in the large commercial OEM sector (aircraft with 100 or more seats) with order announcements by Boeing and Airbus leading to planned increases in aircraft production (except for 737 Max) has been boosting this industry. As a result of these traits, TransDigm has been experiencing solid top-line growth, which can be expected to continue in the near term as well. Notably, the industry consensus expects increase in production rate for commercial airframes as well as RPM growth to continue in 2020. Anticipating these growth trends to continue, the company's management projects its commercial aftermarket revenues to grow annually in the mid-single-digit to high single-digit percent range, while commercial OEM revenue growth is estimated in the low single-digit to mid-single-digit percent range for fiscal 2020.

Increased revenue passenger miles should boost TransDigm's revenue growth. Expansionary defense budget will aid its defense business.

- ▲ Apart from serving the commercial aerospace market, TransDigm's products also holds a significant position in the U.S. defense aerospace market. Impressively, the company's defense business witnessed solid 11% year over year revenue growth in the fiscal first quarter. Moreover, TransDigm has been enjoying significant growth opportunities in the defense space on account of the expansionary budgetary policy adopted by the U.S. administration as well as other developing nations in past couple of years.

For instance, the U.S. fiscal 2020 defense budget includes a massive spending plan of $57.7 billion on aircraft. This should enable Boeing and other military aircraft producers to acquire significant defense contracts from the Pentagon, which in turn, should benefit equipment suppliers like Transdigm. Backed by the higher-than-expected defense sales growth in fiscal 2019, management projects its fiscal 2020 defense revenues to grow in the mid-single-digit figure compared with the previous year.

- ▲ While frequent contract wins boost TransDigm's organic growth, the company strives to strengthen its position in highly-engineered proprietary aerospace components' niche markets through strategic acquisitions. As of Sep 30, 2019, the company successfully acquired approximately 85 businesses or product lines since its formation in 1993. In March 2019, TransDigm completed its largest acquisition by buying Esterline Technologies Corporation for $4 billion. This deal has significantly expanded TransDigm's platform of proprietary and sole-source products for the aerospace and defense industries, strengthening its position both in the Original Equipment Manufacturing (OEM) and aerospace aftermarket.

Notably, company's cash generated from operating activities grew 31% year over year in fiscal first quarter to $433 million driven by the Esterline deal, which also drove 39% of TransDigm's sales growth in the last reported quarter. Given the company's track record, we may expect to witness more such accretive acquisitions by TransDigm in the coming days. Such solid acquisition strategy must have caused investors to retain their confidence in this stock. Evidently, in a year's time shares of the company have declined 24.8% compared to its industry's 38.1% decline.

Reasons To Sell:

- ▼ TransDigm had a notable long-term debt of $18 billion as of Sep 30, 2019, compared with $16.5 billion at the end of Sep 30, 2019. Interestingly, the company has been witnessing a trend in relation to its rising long-term debt over the past few years. The company's long-term debt rose 32% at the end of fiscal 2019, 9.5% at the end of fiscal 2018 and 15.4% at the end of fiscal 2017. Moreover, the company's debt leverage ratio, computed as total debt divided by EBITDA, stood at 7.25 to 1, as of Dec 28, 2019. Such unimpressive leverage ratios and debt levels may discourage safe-bet investors in choosing this stock going ahead.
- ▼ TransDigm's business is sensitive to the number of flight hours that its customers' planes spend in air, the size and age of the worldwide aircraft fleet and customers' profitability. Its business is also directly affected by changes in RPMs, the size and age of the worldwide aircraft fleet and changes in the profitability of the commercial airline industry (to a lesser extent). These items are, in turn, affected by the general economic conditions and any unfavorable fluctuations in them can hurt the company's growth trajectory.
- ▼ Although the company has outperformed its industry in the past year, a comparative analysis of its historical P/E ratio reflects a relatively gloomy picture that might be a cause for investors' concern. The stock currently has a trailing 12-month P/E ratio of 18.46. This level compares unfavorably with what the stock saw in the past 12 months. The ratio is also higher than the industry's average of 11.76.

Increased debt may keep TransDigm's operating results under pressure. A comparative analysis of the company's historical P/E ratio reflects a relatively gloomy picture
